

NWAC

2017 / 2018

ANNUAL REPORT

Message from the Directors

The 2017-18 winter was an active and productive year for NWAC. In general, the weather patterns and snowpack were near historic norms as season precipitation totals approached 100 inches of water equivalent (93" at 4,200 feet on Mt Baker Ski Area and 79" at Snoqualmie Pass 3,020 feet by mid-May). Snowpack depths ended the season between 96-108% of normal at weather stations throughout the Cascades.

On multiple occasions this season, our organization experienced very demanding periods that ranged from a sold out NSAW, to our highest grossing year-end campaign and the addition of two new avalanche specialists, to seven tragic avalanche fatalities in less than a month. Through all our seasonal hurdles and successes, we're proud to say that our team finished the season stronger than ever including surpassing our budget revenue.

Here are some highlights of what we set out to achieve with your support:

- Adding field-based avalanche forecasters (Avalanche Specialists) to our team of Avalanche Meteorologists and Professional Observers.
- Refine and optimize the Professional Observer program to work with field-based avalanche forecasters.
- Develop and implement new Snowshoe-specific educational offerings better tailored to the how users move in terrain.
- Dramatically increase outreach and public facing within our snowmobile community.
- Launch new trailhead outreach program that interfaces with users unfamiliar with NWAC.
- Hire two new staff to ensure the greatest number of educational offerings to date.

We're excited to say that we accomplished every objective on the list.

Overall, there was much growth in staffing and programs which is propelling the center forward for future seasons. Looking towards next year, our goal is to define, refine, and target the programs, outreach, and products of Northwest Avalanche Center. We appreciate the all your support—we couldn't do this without you!

Thank you!

2017-2018 Weather and Avalanche Summary

Cold early season storms brought snow to the Cascades on schedule, then were punctuated by a prolonged period of high pressure in mid-December and by major rain events over Thanksgiving and during the first week of January. By mid-January a deep and a relatively average snowpack prevailed. On the west side of the range to the Cascade Crest the height of snow was approaching three meters. To the east of the Cascade crest some slopes held less than 150 centimeters of snow and harbored thick persistent weak layers. January and February were categorized by an onslaught of cold storms with brief periods of rising freezing levels and light rain. The second half of February saw enough clear periods followed by storms to bury up to three layers of near surface facets across much of the Cascades. The February 13 layer (or 18 depending on location) was the most widespread and well-developed. These angular grains averaged 1.5mm in size. In the last week of February, thinner and less widely distributed layers of facets (formed by radiation recrystallization) were buried on steep, sunny slopes.

By February 18 NWAC began forecasting for persistent slab avalanches in most of the zones. From February 25 through March 10 a series of five avalanche accidents resulted in seven fatalities. Of the fatalities, four of the victims traveled on snowmobiles, one traveled on splitboard with snowmobile access, one was on skis, and one was on snowshoes. Including the victims, a total of 13 people were buried (partially or completely) in these five accidents. The accidents were spread over four different forecast zones and all involved the late February persistent weak layers. This speaks to the widespread distribution of the February PWLs. This cluster of tragic accidents over a short timespan had a major impact on those close to the victims, on the backcountry communities, and upon the NWAC staff. NWAC field staff responded to the accidents with unprecedented coverage. Forecasters and staff observers visited each site within a day of the accident, initiated investigations, and published written reports. When requested, NWAC staff provided support for the associated search and rescue efforts.

The prolonged period of elevated danger in February and March brought many challenges. It came at the tail end of a very stormy couple months during which the NWAC staff had worked hard to stay on top of conditions. Forecasters felt an urgent need to provide useful and relevant advice to users during the dangerous conditions. Working in teams, the forecaster and observer staff merged their diverse skill sets to craft effective messaging. They were able to track weak layers and provide travel advice with precision not previously seen at the center.

By far the biggest challenge to the NWAC forecasters during this season came at the end of this persistent slab cycle. Forecasters scoured incoming material for data and observations that led to confidence in dropping the Persistent Slab (by then Deep Persistent Slab) messaging from the forecast. While forecasting persistent avalanche problems often presents challenges, they are unique in the quick-changing snowpack of the Pacific Northwest. One challenge is the combination these snowpack characteristics with the user demographics of the region. Even experienced and well-educated backcountry travelers may not have much experience with active persistent slab conditions. In telling users that avalanches may break wider than they expect, it may be extra challenging for travelers in the Northwest to anticipate what that kind of propagation (and resulting avalanches) could actually look like.

Despite the unfortunate string of fatalities, it was a very successful season for NWAC. We are excited to further build our capacities as a team for 2018-19. We will continue to grow field-based forecasting components and more specific regional coverage along with the well-established avalanche weather forecasting side of the center.

WHAT WE DO

AVALANCHE & WEATHER FORECASTS

Throughout the winter, NWAC produces daily avalanche and weather forecasts to communicate avalanche danger throughout the Washington Cascades, Olympics, and Mt. Hood area.

WEATHER STATIONS

Together with our partners, NWAC offers real-time insights into changing mountain conditions through the largest network of mountain weather stations in North America.

EDUCATION

NWAC provides hundreds of educational opportunities from introductory classes to in-depth workshops. We work with new and experienced backcountry travelers to build a community invested in ongoing education.

OUTREACH

We host a variety of events for the backcountry community to connect our members and industry partners in new and innovative ways.

Professional Observer Program

We're taking our forecasting operation to the next level.

This year we added two avalanche specialists who split their time between the field and the office. The avalanche specialists work with the meteorologists and the Pro Observers to synthesize huge amounts of data and write usable, actionable forecasts.

Our team of Professional Observers has a pulse on the mountain snowpack, relaying vital data to the forecasters all winter long. And they do more than that—Pro Observers were on scene at every fatal avalanche accident in the region this season, gathering details for the technical report that helps the avalanche community learn from tragedy.

Staffing

NWAC added staff for the 2017-18 season. Long-time Avalanche Meteorologist Garth Ferber retired in late 2017 and was replaced by Robert Hahn. Robert brings valuable experience with the high-resolution weather models. Josh Hirshberg and Dallas Glass were added to the forecast team as Avalanche Specialists. Both have extensive experience in avalanche education, risk-management, and field-based forecasting outside of NWAC. Matt Primomo was hired as a Leavenworth-based observer to round out the crew of seven staff observers. The staffing additions increased NWAC's capacity in critical areas. The team of NWAC forecasters and field observers worked together to forecast dynamic weather systems, track avalanche conditions, deliver helpful travel advice, and respond to accidents when they occurred.

Garth Ferber

Education

Our outreach went up by 25% this year, with over 7,500 people attending slideshows, clinics, and field trainings through partnerships with schools, outdoor organizations, and retailers. NWAC continues to meet otherwise unmet educational needs in regional avalanche education.

AWARENESS

Our awareness program focuses on exactly that: increasing public awareness of the hazards present on snow covered mountain slopes. This program is particularly critical at a time of unprecedented growth in backcountry use, with thousands of new snowshoers hitting the trailhead each winter. And its 100% free to any group that requests a presentation.

YOUTH

We reached over 2,000 youth through schools, community organizations, and partner programs. Not only have we shared valuable safety training with youth programs at ski areas and outdoor clubs, but we've helped middle and high school students explore avalanches through applied science.

SNOWMOBILE

Our new one-day training program is growing in popularity, and we're reaching more snowmobilers than ever.

GOING DEEP

Our workshop series is going strong in its 6th year. With help from MSR and REI, we're offering ongoing education to backcountry users who have undergone safety training, but who still want to reduce their risk and grow their understanding.

SNOW SCHOOL

This year over 500 Snow School students got hands on in snow pits with NWAC avalanche educators. In its fourth year, the Mt. Baker Snow School provides on-the-snow experiences to middle school students from Whatcom County. A partnership program of the North Cascades Institute, Mt. Baker Ski Area, WWU, and NWAC, we believe Snow School is a powerful model for familiarizing young people with the snowy mountain environment, and builds a foundation for lifelong awareness of avalanche hazards.

PROFESSIONAL AND INSTITUTIONAL

We're working to ensure that any group organizing outings in avalanche terrain has access to adequate education, tools and resources in order to effectively reduce their risk. NWAC continued to work with local businesses and non-profits this year, offering support to the Seattle Mountain Rescue, the Mountaineers, REI, and others.

Public Outreach

With the rapidly growing number of people playing in the backcountry in the winter, the need to raise awareness about NWAC has never been greater. With this in mind, we have focused a lot of energy on spreading the word about NWAC in recent years, and we are happy to report that our efforts are paying off. After a couple of lackluster winters, traffic to our website is on the rise again with almost 1.96 million sessions from over 538K unique users on the site—the highest numbers we have ever reported.

Trailhead Outreach

For the first time ever, NWAC went straight to the trailhead in order to learn more about backcountry travelers, what they need, and how we can help. The pilot year was a big success, and we're looking forward to gleaning new insights that can help us better achieve our mission. Our team of very dedicated volunteers visited backcountry trailheads throughout the Cascade Mountains, where, spread over 10 different weekends over the course of the winter, NWAC counted over 1,684 users, collected 898 surveys, and interacted w/ countless backcountry enthusiasts. One Saturday of note, volunteers counted over 200 users (mostly snowshoers) braving a downpour to enjoy the backcountry near Mount Baker Ski Area. Along with snowshoers, motorized users are a group that, like in many regions, we are targeting for future outreach.

The Northwest Snow and Avalanche Workshop brings together the professional and recreational backcountry snow community for a day of learning, critical thought, and fun. This year, nearly 500 professionals and enthusiasts packed the Mountaineers Program Center and our lineup was more diverse than ever, with a wide range of historical, scientific, and practical topics.
