Director's Statement

This was NWAC's 50th season — a milestone we're proud to reach. Fifty years ago, three budding forecasters issued our region's first avalanche statement. This winter, hundreds of thousands of people checked one before heading into the mountains. Hitting that mark gave us a good reason to look back at how far we've come, and to think about what it takes to keep going.

It was a tough year in our mountains and across the West. Warm temperatures and low snow made for thin, tricky conditions all winter. Even in a quieter season with fewer avalanches, we were reminded that it only takes one bad day: an early-season avalanche north of Cle Elum took the lives of two backcountry skiers. That kind of loss stays with us, and it's a big part of why we do this work.

Behind the scenes, we crossed a finish line years in the making. For a long time, most of our forecasters worked as temporary federal employees, hired back season to season, without much stability. This year, that changed. The forecasting team moved into permanent-seasonal positions. It's not a flashy change, but it's a big one. It means the people you count on to keep this community safe can build a life around this work.

None of this happens without you. Individual donors contribute a significant portion of our funding, and even in a lean snow year, you still showed up. Your support enabled us to advocate for permanent forecasting positions, and it's behind just about everything else we do. And we're so grateful for your continued belief in NWAC's mission.

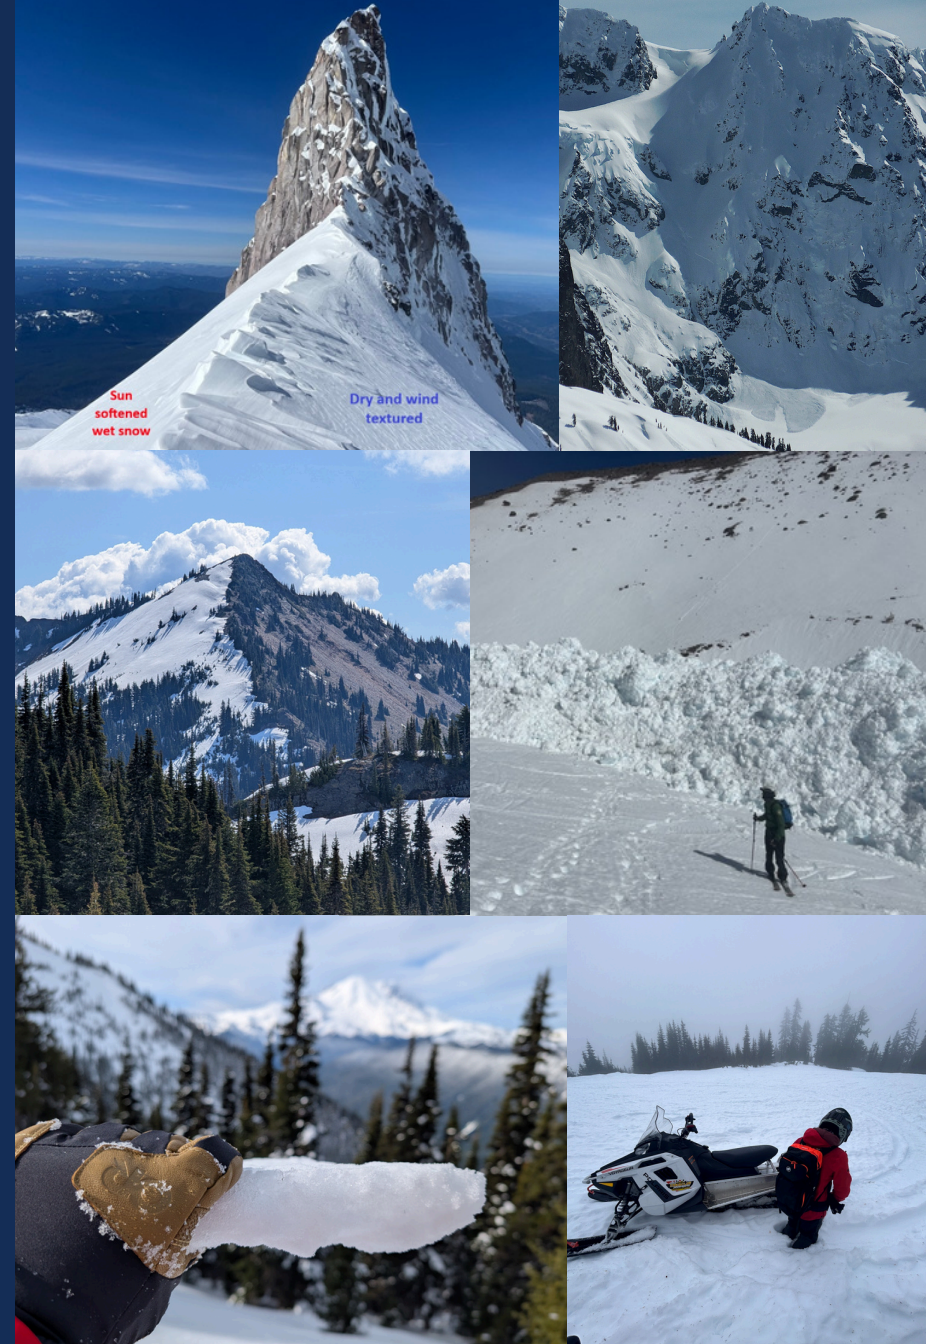

As we head into our next fifty years with more people in the backcountry and uncertainty with federal support, your partnership matters more than ever. Thanks for supporting us through five decades. We're looking forward to the next one.

Season Summary

We Turned 50! On December 6, 1975, Mark Moore, Rich Marriott, and Bud Reanier issued our region's first avalanche forecast, founding what would become NWAC. This season, we took time to celebrate and reflect on that legacy, sharing stories with our founders who remain deeply connected to our community, and honoring the scrappy, mission-driven spirit that has carried us through five decades of service.

Like much of the mountain west, the 2025-26 season was defined not by drought, but by warmth. Ample precipitation arrived throughout the winter, but above-normal temperatures kept snow levels elevated and snowpacks thin. The season opened dramatically with a parade of atmospheric rivers in early December. Over the course of seven days, most of NWAC's mountain weather stations recorded around 20 inches of rain. This historic event washed away our early-season snowpack, caused widespread river flooding and infrastructure damage, and created access challenges that persisted for the entire winter.

Tragically, the season's one fatal avalanche accident occurred early, when four backcountry skiers were caught by an avalanche in the East Central zone north of Cle Elum. Two did not survive. As winter wore on, high snow levels severely limited motorized access, and many human-powered days began in trail shoes rather than on skis or a splitboard.

While thinner than normal snowpacks and warmer than average temperatures seem to define this past season, they don't represent the real impacts. Eye-popping storms, unprecedented access challenges, and remarkable wet avalanche cycles provide another point of reference in an ever-dynamic environment. Simultaneously, collaborative tech projects and expanding education programs keep us anchored in our community. And that's why we're here, to serve our local, regional, and national friends no matter the weather, snowpack, or season.

FIELD OPERATIONS

Weather Station Improvements

Accurate weather forecasting is an essential part of NWAC's avalanche forecasting program. Our network of 53 automated weather stations provides real-time observations that strengthen the accuracy and reliability of our forecasts. These data help us track changing weather conditions, improve our understanding of snowpack evolution, and lend confidence to our forecasting methods. NWAC staff conducted a record 35 weather station visits over the last year, and many more were accomplished with the help of our Program Partners (WSDOT, NPS, and ski areas).

White Pass Rebuild: Rebuilt the White Pass wind site from scratch following the new chairlift (Chair 4) at Pigtail Peak

Heated Wind Systems: Installed two new heated wind systems, now in the testing phase at White Pass and Mt Baker

Modernized Comms: Upgraded comms to cell modems or internet for five stations while decommissioning old phone lines

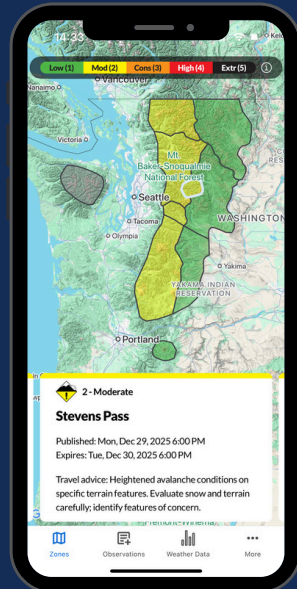

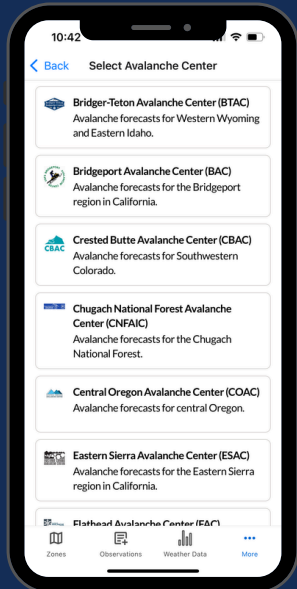

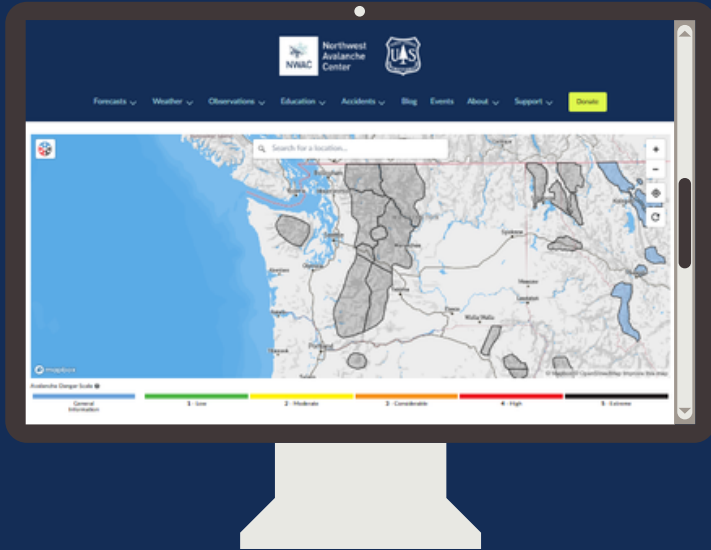

New Sites: Scouted potential new sites near Stevens Pass & Van Epps Pass (East Central zone)

Solar Radiation: Installed two new pyranometers to measure shortwave solar radiation at Stevens Pass & Mission Ridge

Mt St Helens: Decommissioned a site with poor communications and equipment siting and scouted a new future site

TECHNOLOGY

AvyApp & AvyWeb

Avy is a collaborative effort between NWAC & fellow avalanche centers to standardize public-facing technology.

The AvyApp is a mobile app built by NWAC to deliver a mobile-first experience for avalanche forecasts, weather forecasts, weather station data, and observations. This season, we expanded the app to 16 avalanche centers nationwide. We contracted a developer for maintenance and built the largest feature since the app's release: the ability to pan across the map and switch to other forecast centers.

AvyWeb is a collaboratively built website platform that allows centers to manage their own sites within a shared system. Each center maintains its unique identity while sharing costs, infrastructure, cross-center content, design improvements, and user experience research. This season was monumental. We received a large grant from the Murdock Trust that enabled us to design and build the system from the ground up.

The Sierra and Sawtooth avalanche centers went live on the platform last fall without issues. Throughout the season, we continued to polish and fix bugs. NWAC and several other centers will join AvyWeb this upcoming season.

Bringing modern technology best practices into avalanche forecasting allows us to develop forecast products faster, more iteratively, and with data-driven insights. The collaboration between centers has snowballed into other areas, creating a stronger ecosystem of US centers.

Programs for Everyone

Despite the low-snow year, our education programs remained resilient, reaching nearly as many people as last year thanks to careful planning, a dedicated team, and strong community interest in avalanche education.

Avalanche Awareness Classes: Our Avalanche Awareness program remained strong in the 2025/26 season, with 118 classes and over 2,811 class attendees. We maintained a wide geographic reach, with classes held in nine of our 10 forecast zones. In addition to many returning hosts, we worked with several new hosts this year to reach new communities. Despite a lackluster snow year, this program remained robust and on par with other seasons, highlighting the continued demand for free introductory-level education.

Youth Programs: At NWAC, we believe that building a safer future in the mountains starts with educating young adventurers. This season, we continued to bring avalanche awareness to youth across the region, offering tailored classes for school groups, scout troops, sports teams, and other youth organizations. In addition to classroom sessions, we took this learning to the next level with several field-based programs. In partnership with the Leavenworth Fish Hatchery, we delivered avalanche rescue lessons to two middle schools in the Wenatchee School District as part of a winter outdoor education program. After the successful debut of our NWAC x Freeride youth program last season – where athletes learn essential avalanche safety skills, including avalanche rescue, terrain identification, and snowpack assessment – we were thrilled to run this program again with two groups of Crystal Mountain Freeride athletes.

Programs for Everyone

Trailhead Outreach (THO): Despite a late start to winter and a lack of snow at lower elevations, which led to multiple cancellations, the program continued to thrive. This is a testament to our committed education team and volunteers. We conducted 27 outreach days, just three fewer than last season, and maintained a strong geographic presence with events in eight of our 10 forecast zones. Next season, we look forward to engaging with the communities impacted by this year's THO cancellations.

Aspiring Avalanche Instructor Program: In addition to providing education to the recreational community, NWAC also educates and supports aspiring avalanche professionals. In its fifth season, the Aspiring Avalanche Instructor Program offered mentorship and opportunities in the snow and avalanche industry. This train-the-trainer cohort program equips participants to lead introductory avalanche awareness classes and is designed to reduce barriers to entry and create a clear pathway to paid roles. This season, six new instructors completed the training and joined NWAC's pool of Awareness Instructors, helping expand our educational reach while receiving feedback and support on their journey to becoming avalanche professionals.

Snowmobile Program: The low snowpack had a big effect on our snowmobile programming this season, as many local on-snow events were canceled and many trailheads were inaccessible on a machine. New this season, we planned to offer rescue clinics at three large on-snow events, but were only able to attend one since the others were canceled. Additionally, we shifted our motorized THO plan this year to center around warming huts, where snowmobilers can have better conversations with NWAC representatives. Again, only one of the three planned events had enough snow at the trailhead for riding, but we were thrilled to chat with sledders up at Mount Baker. Despite the hit to on-snow programming, NWAC attended multiple large pre-season snowmobile events, including the Sno Jammers Snow Rally in Enumclaw, Sledbash in Cle Elum, and Bavarian Boondockers SnoFest in Leavenworth. We have high hopes for a better snow year next season, so we can debut more of our new snowmobile programming.

Programs for Everyone

Snowshoe Walks: This year, NWAC ran 12 Avalanche Awareness Snowshoe Walks in partnership with the U.S. Forest Service, adding two new walks with the Baker Ranger District in addition to those offered with the Snoqualmie Ranger District. These walks are designed specifically for snowshoers and provide critical, activity-specific avalanche awareness and safety education in an engaging field-based format. As usual, all walks boasted full registration, highlighting the high demand for this targeted education.

Laying Tracks: We made numerous quality improvements to this year's four-part virtual workshop series. We standardized key elements across all four sessions, improving the flow and connectedness while still allowing each member of our education and forecast teams to use their individual instructional style. We also reviewed and updated the curriculum for each session, adding more interactive components to keep the virtual delivery model engaging. Designed to dive deeper into topics introduced in an awareness-level class, such as terrain management and how weather affects the snowpack, this workshop series reached 123 people across diverse areas of the region, and even a few outside the Pacific Northwest.

Professional Programs: From ski patrollers to ski guides to avalanche forecasters and technicians, NWAC is committed to being a resource for our professional partners. We once again hosted a Pre-Season Avalanche Educator Session, creating a dialogue about the nuances of our forecast and changes to our process with those teaching NWAC's forecast to the public. We also continued to host the SAR Summit at the start of the season, communicating with SAR groups across the region about how we can best support each other during avalanche incidents and involvements. These events strengthen professional networks, promote consistent messaging, and advance avalanche safety across the PNW.

EVENTS

A Season of Gatherings

First Tracks Fest: After 10+ years of kicking off the season with Snowbash, we tried something new this year: a free community celebration designed to lower the barrier to entry and bring even more people into the NWAC community. The inaugural event created space for longtime supporters and first-time backcountry travelers alike to connect with NWAC staff, forecasters, and each other before the snow began to fall. We're grateful to everyone who helped us launch this new tradition, and can't wait to see how First Tracks Fest grows in the seasons ahead.

NSAW: We host the 19th annual Northwest Snow and Avalanche Workshop, which once again sold out with over 400 people in attendance. We learned from avalanche professionals, researchers, and educators as they covered topics ranging from snow science and weather research to mountain rescue and responsible recreation. NSAW featured a diverse lineup of breakout rooms, allowing attendees to tailor their day to their experience level and interests. We are grateful for the passionate community, professional speakers, incredible volunteers, and dedicated sponsors who make NSAW a meaningful continuing education opportunity.

Meet Your Forecaster: We brought this longstanding event series to six communities across Washington & Oregon—Seattle, Bellingham, Leavenworth, Enumclaw, Yakima, and Portland—connecting face-to-face with the people who rely on our forecasts.

50th Anniversary Celebration: This season, we had the privilege of marking a major milestone: half a century of NWAC. Our anniversary celebration this spring brought together NWAC founders, members, volunteers, instructors, and longtime supporters for an unforgettable evening of reflection and connection.

Membership: NWAC’s avalanche forecasting program has evolved significantly over the past 50 years. This is made possible with the dedicated support of our incredible member community. Individual contributions make up over half of our annual revenue, and without that grassroots foundation, daily avalanche forecasts simply wouldn't be possible.

Volunteers: Our wide reach and impact would not be possible without the amazing support of our dedicated volunteers. Volunteers played a vital role in multiple areas of the organization this season, including events, outreach, technology projects, and membership mailings. For the third consecutive year, we thanked these volunteers through our Volunteer Give-Back Program, offering NWAC memberships for hours volunteered and providing a free Avalanche Level 1, Level 2, or Rescue Course to those who gave 30 or more hours of their time this season. We believe in reinvesting in our volunteers who help drive our mission forward.

This season, we had the privilege of marking a major milestone: half a century of NWAC. Our spring anniversary celebration brought together NWAC founders, members, volunteers, and instructors for an unforgettable evening of reflection and connection. The laughter, conversations, and shared stories were a powerful reminder of why this work matters and how far we've come together. As we look ahead to the next 50 years, we carry that energy with us.

MEDIA OUTREACH

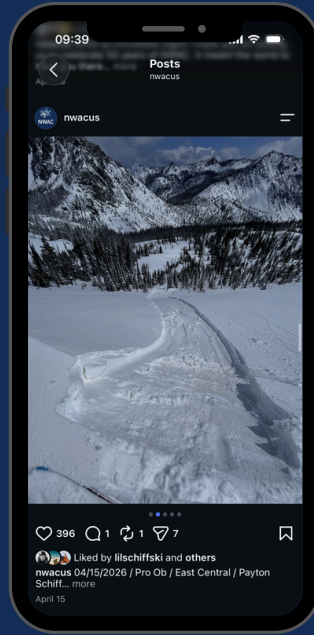

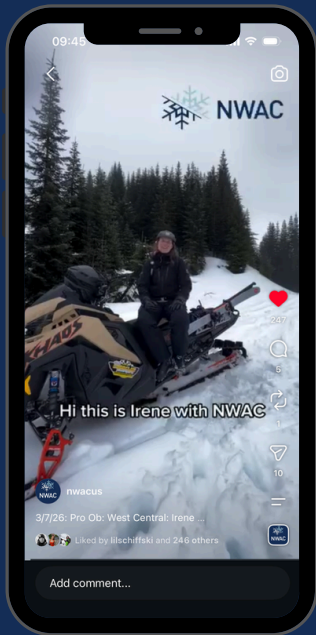

Keeping the community informed

Our channels kept the community informed all season with expanded video content & real-time conditions updates.

Social Media: NWAC social media channels maintained our connection with the avalanche community this season. Despite a low-snow year, our forecast team continued heading into the field, sharing real-time observations and expert analysis to keep followers informed of rapidly evolving conditions. We continue to increase production of video content, expanding both the scope and frequency of real-time conditions updates. Through these efforts, we worked to grow an engaged, informed community.

Throughout the season, we published 71 Instagram posts of professional observations, reaching over 654,473 people, and 65 Facebook posts of professional observations, reaching over 540,021 people.

Backcountry Bulletin: This weekly email newsletter remains one of our most viewed outreach pieces. Every Friday during the forecast season, we share the state of the snowpack, provide a mountain weather update, highlight an observation, and provide updates on our programming via email. Last season, we sent 29 bulletins. If you would like to subscribe to the Backcountry Bulletin, please visit our website.
